THE ASTRAL TRANSLATION: Concept notes from AurionLKD, the game development

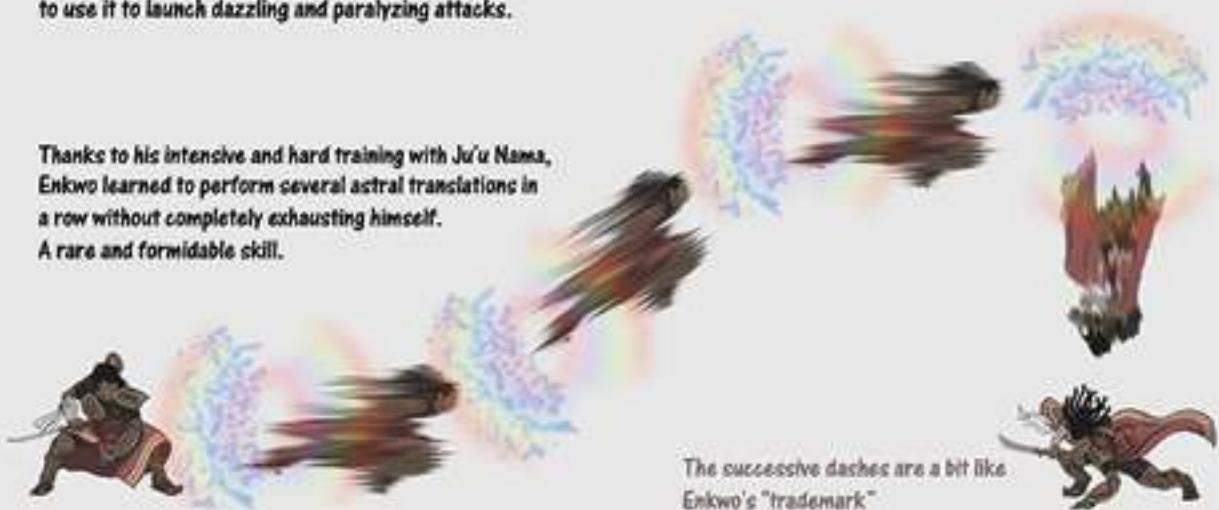

The Aurionic warrior can use his Aurion to make an almost instantaneous movement from one place to another. What happens is that the warrior opens for a short moment a passage to the astral plane and crosses this passage to come out at another point. It gives the impression when you look at it that he has moved at an unnatural speed almost as if he had teleported.

Aurionic warriors generally use this "technique" as a defensive tool: dodging attacks, moving away from combat or destabilizing their opponents' senses.

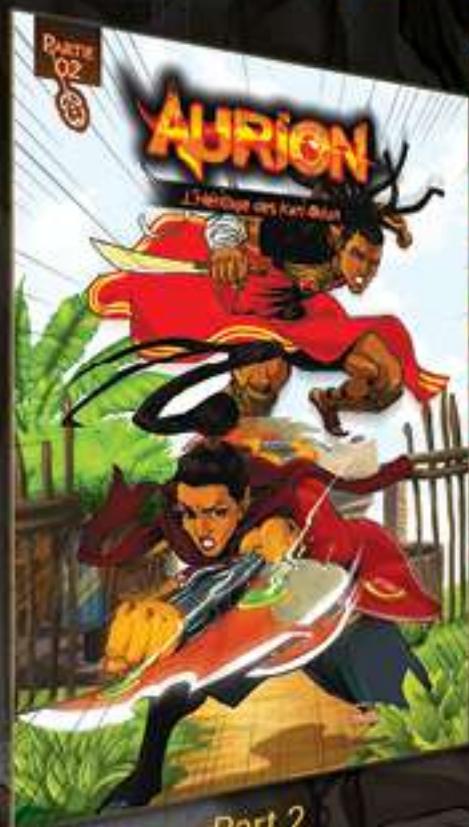

But Enkwo, through his martial art, Kaaro Aargudan, has also learned to use it to launch dazzling and paralyzing attacks.

Thanks to his intensive and hard training with Ju'u Nama, Enkwo learned to perform several astral translations in a row without completely exhausting himself. A rare and formidable skill.

The successive dashes are a bit like Enkwo's "trademark"
